BARRIO LATINO ART FESTIVAL

Dear Friend,

The 6th Barrio Latino Art Festival celebrates diversity, innovation, and creative achievement--is being planned for Aug. 13, 2017 at 1205 Broadway St (corner of Broadway St and Western St), Toledo, OH 43609, from 12 Noon to 9:00 pm. Barrio Latino Arts Festival, will promote tourism, culture heritage, and the arts in a bold and innovative way. Our mission is to support artists, promote artistic expression, create funds for local charitable organizations, and bring visitors and neighbors together to share in the spirit of the arts in our community. Proceeds from this festival go towards supporting two area nonprofit organizations: (1) NUESTRA GENTE Community Projects, Inc., (2) THE PROVIDENCE CENTER. . We recognize the positive effect creative activity has on individuals: providing enjoyment, enlivening spaces, and enriching lives. The festival also makes a practical contribution in terms of sustainability, providing employment, encouraging learning, and inspiring people to adopt active lifestyles. The festival includes live music; folk dancing performances; artisans and crafters with handmade products such as scarves, blankets, cosmetics, and jewelry; a car show; and art kid's activities including a drawing table, face painting, recognition award to an artist, artwork on display, mural painting, crafts, car show, jalapeño contest, and many other special performances and forms of entertainment. Authentic Hispanic food prepared by cooks from the community is one of our biggest attractions. The festival is set in the heart of an urban neighborhood in South Toledo and attracts a very diverse crowd. And, of course, there are offerings for all age groups. The event will be held on the street in open areas with full access for people with disabilities and is easily accessible from public bus routes. We want to increase the attractiveness of the area to tourists, businesses, people and investments through the festival. People (tourists/visitors) spend money on attending the arts and on local businesses. Further, local spending by these arts venues and patronized businesses has indirect multiplier effects.

The Barrio Latino Art Festival brings people and organizations together to celebrate the diversity within the Hispanic heritage and culture. The program will balance community participation with excellence by offering events of both a local and international flavor. Admission is free.

This is a chance to give back to the community and give at-risk youth life-changing opportunities through the arts. Supporting us helps us show our kids another way of life.

We would be grateful if you could support our community Arts Festival. More than 900 volunteers and spectators were in attendance last year, and the event was covered by the local newspapers and television stations. We are anxiously looking forward to even greater success at this year's event and our teens are running much of the programming. If you support us, we will include you in all marketing materials, to our website and plan on recognizing your organization at our event.

Below are the details concerning this year's sponsorship levels:

Elite Sponsorship options:

Eleven State Teams Develop Colorectal Cancer Screening Plans at 80% by 2018 Forum II

CDC hosted the second 80% by 2018 Forum: Increasing Colorectal Cancer Screening Rates Through Enhanced Partnerships between Comprehensive Cancer Control Coalitions and Federally Qualified Health Centers on July 18-19 in Atlanta GA.

Nearly 100 participants, presenters, trainers, facilitators, and subject matter experts attended this 1 ½ day training.

Eleven teams were selected; Idaho, Missouri, Arkansas, District of Columbia, Hawaii, Indiana, New Jersey, North Carolina, Puerto Rico, and Rhode Island.

State teams created action plans focusing on evidence-based strategies such as building and sustaining partner/stakeholders (local roundtables, coalition workgroups), enhancing patient navigation systems, provider feedback and assessment, and a number of communication strategies.

Follow-up technical assistance will be provided to help teams finalize and implement their action plans. The 80% by 2018 Forum III will be held September 6-7 with another group of 11 state teams. The Forums are a collaboration with CDC, National Cancer Institute, American Cancer Society, Health Resources and Services Administration, National Association of Community Health Centers, National Colorectal Cancer Roundtable, and the National Association of Chronic Disease Directors.

Senator John McCain Diagnosed with Brain Cancer

Senator John McCain has been diagnosed with the aggressive brain cancer glioblastoma. Last week, he underwent surgery to remove a blood clot above his left eye. A subsequent pathology report of that tissue found that it was cancerous.

"The Senator and his family are reviewing further treatment options with his Mayo Clinic care team," his office said in a written statement.

Glioblastoma is the most common form of brain cancer, making up 16 percent of all brain malignancies. It is rare, striking some three people out of 100,000 in the U.S. McCain has had multiple cases of melanoma, a skin cancer, that have been removed surgically according to health records he made public during his 2008 presidential bid. However McCain's glioblastoma is a primary tumor, doctors said in the note issued by his office, meaning that it arose independently of those previous bouts of cancer.

USPSTF Stays Course on Ovarian Cancer Screening

Reprinted from MedPage Today, July 18, 2017

Clinicians should not screen for ovarian cancer in women who have no signs or symptoms of the disease, according to a draft recommendation from the United States Preventive Services Task Force.

The Grade D recommendation, available for public comment until Aug. 14, reaffirms a 2012 USPSTF recommendation against ovarian cancer screening for asymptomatic women.

The recommendation does not apply to women who are known carriers of BRCA1/2 mutations, which increase the risk of developing ovarian cancer.

No major medical organization recommends screening the general population of women for ovarian cancer, USPSTF officials said in a statement.

"The task force found that screening women without signs or symptoms for ovarian cancer does not decrease the number of deaths from the disease and may lead to unnecessary surgeries," said task force member Maureen Phipps, MD, of Brown University in Providence, R.I.

"The current screening tests do not do a good job identifying whether a woman does or does not have ovarian cancer," added USPSTF chair David Grossman, MD, of Group Health and the University of Washington in Seattle.

"The Task Force hopes that in the future, better screening tests for ovarian cancer will be developed."

The draft recommendation and the evidence review supporting the recommendation have been posted to the USPSTF website.

Individuals or groups may submit public comments about either document through the website.

Following the public comment period, the USPSTF will review the comments and make revisions, if any are deemed necessary, before releasing a final recommendation, which will be posted to the task force website and published in a major medical journal.

Dear friends,

The incredible ALEC meeting in Denver last week sent many of us home with a new understanding of the power we have to affect change across the nation and deliver real results to our local communities. What we heard when we were together was a clear opportunity agenda for 2018 and beyond. We can make a real difference right now. By pursuing tax cuts; workforce development; labor, occupational licensing, and criminal justice reforms in our states, we can deliver measurable success and lead the nation into the 2018.

But more powerful than our ability to legislate or innovate as individuals is our ability to deliver real results to our local communities by—with a single, strong, national voice—calling for genuine accountability and a real plan of action to deliver meaningful reforms at the federal level. During the 2016 election cycle, nearly every presidential candidate spoke about returning power to the states, and to the people.

Now, quite simply, it's up to us to take the power that's been offered. It's time to lead.

Ours is not a revolution to wrest control from the federal government—certainly there are countless cases where a federal government is good and necessary. Ours instead is a rebalancing where local state legislators who are closer to their communities and fight daily to protect hardworking taxpayers have more of a voice in the direction of our country.

Each of us has a voice. If we work together and echo one another to advance an opportunity agenda at the state and federal level, we can very quickly deliver real results. At the ALEC meeting, Governor Bevin called the approach "Shock and Awe." On one January day, the Kentucky Legislature sent seven bills including right-to-work and other key reforms to Governor Bevin's desk. Kentucky legislators achieved their bold goal by working together and fostering partnership between both houses and the Governor's office long in advance of the votes. You see, as Speaker Gingrich said in Denver, "If we collectively take up this challenge, we can make it dramatically easier to change America."

At the beginning of this Congress, the federal legislature also set forth several bold goals; among them healthcare and tax reform. Because healthcare makes up one-sixth of the American economy and the taxes people pay fund everything from street lights, roads and bridges to public employee pensions and interest payments on debt, healthcare and tax reform are very bold goals. And it hasn't worked quite as we imagined. There is conflict around these reforms because there are real issues at stake. And, that's to be expected.

In Denver, Speaker Gingrich proposed a more simple, incremental approach—one that will help normal folks, not tax economists—understand the value of a tax system that protects hardworking taxpayers instead of treating them like an ATM. The most simple and immediate tax reform that we can achieve this year is a tax cut on individuals and on business.

Our plan of action starts here: Federal tax cuts on individuals and businesses will let people keep more of their hard-earned money and help business owners reinvest in training, expansion and wage increases. A recent poll of 500 small business owners conducted by the Job Creators Network shows how tax cuts for small businesses directly benefits hardworking citizens. A full 70 percent of small businesses would reinvest tax cuts back into their business and employees through capital investments, wage increases, new hiring and expansions. Further, nearly half of small business owners responded by saying a tax cut is the policy reform that would help their business the most.

We have just suffered through the weakest economic recovery since World War II. The American people want to work. They are leading the technology revolution and ready for a new industrial revolution focused on advanced manufacturing and innovation. But, the unbridled power of American exceptionalism has been constrained for too long by over taxation, over regulation and too much red tape.

Imagine for a moment what the country would look like if states—in partnership with Congress—truly led the way on issues like tax cuts. It's not that hard to imagine really: In the past four years, 30 states have cut taxes. Nine states have no income tax at all. No income tax states grew 111 percent faster than the nine states with the highest income tax, and private sector job growth increased 28 percent faster.

I ask you to imagine, but it really isn't that hard. States are already leading the way. Washington, D.C. simply must follow. But they won't know where to go unless we tell them. It's our time to lead. We simply can't let this opportunity pass.

So, now I'm going to ask you to do a few things. They will help you join in our plan of action and accountability that puts our local communities first. You don't have to do them right away because they will take a little time, but please commit right now to doing the following:

1. Watch or re-watch the following speeches from Annual Meeting:

- Speaker Newt Gingrich on Tax Cuts, local power and understanding Trump
- Governor Matt Bevin and Travis Brown on labor reform and workforce development
- Secretary of Labor Alexander Acosta on occupational licensing and workforce development

2. Read the following briefs:

- The Jonathan Williams Tax Cut memo
- The ALEC Tax Cut Round Ups, to learn how tax cuts benefited 30 states
- The 10th Edition of Rich States, Poor States

3. Share this perspective with your local communities and your congressional delegation

4. Join upcoming ALEC organizing calls in September and October so we are all ready and committed to the 2018 opportunity agenda.

Thank you for your commitment to ALEC, to our founding principles of limited government, free markets and federalism and to the United States of America.

Sincerely,

Senator Jim Buck

DeVos Urges State Legislators to Take on Foes of Campus Speech

The Washington Times | Campus Speech | Ed. Secretary DeVos

The Washington Times covered ALEC's new campus speech model policy, the Forming Open and Robust University Minds (FORUM) Act.

"Shelby Emmett, director of ALEC's Center to Protect Free Speech, said the proposed policy differs from others that require free speech education only for incoming freshmen. 'Obviously, there's a problem with free speech on campus well before freshmen arrive if you have administrators or campus police officers who think you can detain or arrest or suspend a student because they passed out a Constitution,' said Ms. Emmett. 'I think it's easy to go after the students, but this is a cultural problem.'"

44th ALEC Annual Meeting Wrap-up

The Center to Protect Free Speech - Annual Meeting Wrap-up

#ALECinCO | Shelby Emmett: semmett@alec.org | 44th ALEC Annual Meeting

- During the State Leadership Academy held directly before ALEC's Annual Meeting, Shelby Emmett participated in a lively discussion regarding donor privacy on a panel moderated by State Policy Network CEO Tracie Sharp. Attending were legislative leaders from 19 states.
 - Shelby Emmett, Center director and former state and Congressional hill staffer, talked to legislative staff from 20 states about campus speech and donor privacy. The Center was very excited to meet so many legislative staff from across the country who are passionate about protecting the free speech rights of their constituents.
 - = ADuring an engaging panel discussion on the importance of commercial speech to the free market economy, members of the Civil Justice Task Force learned that protecting commercial speech is about keeping the government from standing in the way of entrepreneurial endeavors. When overregulation gets in the way of businesses marketing truthful information or forces them to disclose information that will do nothing to cure deceptive practices, it is overstepping the First Amendment and problematically limiting consumer choice. The Center was happy to team up with Amy Anderson, director of the Civil Justice Task Force to moderate the commercial speech panel. The Center would like to thank all the panel participants and the members of the task force for such an incredible welcome.
 - The Center to Protect Free Speech and the Civil Justice Task Force conducted a reception and focus group on donor privacy to learn more about how they can help state legislators on this issue. Thank you to our public sector members for attending the focus group. Your valuable insight helps us each and every day.

Could The National Popular Vote Interstate Compact Reduce Bad Policy-Making In Our Elections?

Townhall

By Matt Vespa

August 10, 2017

Okay-I'm going to step back a second on the Electoral College. In general, I think the institution that has served us well for over 200 years. No, I don't think that the five times a president was elected by winning the 270 electoral votes, but not the popular vote, constitutes a harbinger for the destruction of our republic. Liberals whine about Bush's 2000 win. They whine about Trump's 2016 win, albeit with more froth around the mouth. There were a solid couple of weeks worth of hot takes about how the Electoral College is archaic, racist, and anti-Democratic and yet we're still here. Yet, there's an emerging consensus that while the Electoral College might have served us well, we're approaching a point where the Democrats could run the table, and that swing states, in general, are dictating policy as a result of this system. We'll get to that in a second.

In April, Townhall was invited to a seminar by the Institute for Research on Presidential Elections to a seminar about the National Popular Vote Interstate Compact and other reforms relating to the Electoral College, such as electors chosen by congressional district and proportional representation. I can already hear the groans. I had my reservations, but while I'm still on the sidelines concerning taking a side-the point about swing states being a catalyst for bad policy is compelling.

If you go on their website and search on your own, you can get a brief history about the Electoral College, and see how the system we witness in action every four years was not the one envisioned by the Founding Fathers. The system was a form of compromise. James Madison wanted direct elections; Alexander Hamilton wanted Congress to elect the president. States were allowed to decide how they would participate in the Electoral College because no one could figure out a uniform way on how to elect the president. The point is winner-take-all was never in the cards from the beginning. Most states did not have such a system in our first election. Concerning picking electors, the states had a hodgepodge of presidential elector systems, governor appointments, or congressional elector districts to fill their slates.

After Thomas Jefferson lost the election of 1796, thanks to three electors breaking for John Adams through the district system, Virginia passed a winner-take-all to ensure Jefferson would receive the state's entire slate for 1800. Massachusetts repealed their district system to ensure that all of their electors would vote for John Adams in the election of 1800. This set off a domino effect, where virtually all of the states were rushing to establish winner-take-all systems by the time of the Civil War.

So, let's forward to the modern era. Some could argue that the writing is on the wall. In the last six presidential elections, Democrats have been able to easily win 242 electoral votes from the West Coast and the liberal northeast. They only need to win Florida to lock up the necessary votes (271) for the presidency-and Florida will probably be a blue state in the next two election cycles.

So, how will this interstate compact work? Well, first enough states have to sign on to equal the required amount of electoral votes to win the presidency. Right now, 11 states equaling 165 electoral votes have signed on, the proposal has gained traction in other state legislatures, and two states-Georgia and Missouri-have passed a committee.

If enough states to equal the required 270 sign on, the compact is triggered and whoever wins the most popular votes is elected president, regardless of party. It also reduces the influence of swing states and expands the map. In 2012, 100 percent of the general election events occurred in just 12 states. Playing Devil's advocate, I'm sure the people of Kansas, Missouri, and Montana probably have the exact same concerns about jobs and health care, as people from Ohio.

Still convinced this is a bad idea? Well, if this were to occur, conservatives in New York and California, who have been hiding in the bunker for decades, would be incentivized to turn out and vote. In the Empire State for example, the Conservative Party of NY found that there was a pool of 1.6 million voters who would support their causes. It's not a far jump to see them supporting a Republican for president, yet, given that they know it's a deep blue state, whose winner-take-all electors will go to the Democrats-only around 500,000 turn out and vote. It's possible to make states more competitive and it's possible that Republicans can still win national elections through this compact. If you believe that we're a center-right nation, and I think we are, running on our ideas and winning shouldn't be a problem. Gone are the days of tailoring campaign messaging for some states, but not others to avoid alienating voter groups.

This is probably the most compelling part of the NPV compact: it could curb the proliferation of bad national policies that are drummed up to win elections. George W. Bush pushed No Child Left Behind, which federalized education policy, to win over mothers in Hamilton County, Ohio, one of the key counties in the state. Medicare Part D, which added trillions to the unfunded liability of the entitlement program, was meant to keep seniors from drifting too far from the GOP (i.e. keep Florida in play). Those are just two policies that have been detrimental to the country. One added to the debt and deficit, while the other stripped power away from local school boards who know their districts best. Under the NPV, the Republican Party can run a hardcore conservative campaign. For liberals, they can run on their single-payer, political correctness, and identity politics nonsense if they wish as well. What about the 11 most populous states running the table? Well, NPV's memorandum on the myths about NPV notes, "no big state delivered more than 63 percent of the popular vote to any candidate in 2000, 2004, 2008, or 2012."

Moreover, the five biggest states-Ohio, Florida, Virginia, Pennsylvania, Michigan, and North Carolina-were closer to 50-50. Also, they're not predisposed to either party; Bush won six-Texas, Florida, Ohio, North Carolina, Georgia, and Virginia-in 2006.

The memo also notes:

1. The rural vote is already diminished since these states are not considered in the battleground category under the current system
2. It won't allow cities to dominate the electoral landscape because the ten largest cities only house eight percent of the U.S. population. The 100 biggest cities (one-sixth of the total U.S. population) voted 63 percent Democratic in 2004, but 60 percent of rural Americans voted Republican. The remaining two-thirds live in the suburbs, which are evenly divided.
3. On voter fraud, it's hard to have a concerted national effort to defraud an election, whereas it's easier to alter a smaller pool of votes in a winner-take-all state and possibly flip it. Florida's 25 electoral votes decided the 2000 election out of over 105 million ballots cast. That wouldn't be an issue under the NPV.
4. On its constitutionality, Article II states, "Each state shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of Electors." Winner-take-all systems are state-based laws. The NPV is a state-based initiative. All it is doing is replacing winner-take-all states, or enough of them to trigger the compact, by awarding electors to the candidate who has won the most popular votes in all 50 states.

The rest of the information is featured on their site. There are some appealing things to this: the freedom to run a campaign that is truly at the heart of the party platform, the notion of winning California again, and the reduction in bad policies crafted to win over key counties in a handful of battleground states. The deluge of new Republican-leaning voters leaving the bunkers in deep Blue America, knowing their vote will count just as much as a battleground state voter could have a significant impact. It's not a constitutional amendment. All of these are very interesting things, but overhauling a centuries-old institution requires more debate. There should be a long, vibrant debate and it should be held nationally.

Both sides will be hesitant to budge. Democrats see a possible lock on the Electoral College, while GOP voters will fear big states and metropolitan areas dominating the political scene. Yet, stepping away from national politics, you can't win a majority in Congress by just winning the cities. If there's one area where have moved on, it's the significance of cities in our national politics. Yes, bastions of power, but not all-powerful. These areas are still insufferable with their politics, however. Also, while it's a progressive analysis, the Ruy Teixeira of the Center for American Progress and Bill Frey of Brookings noted a scenario that could put Democrats in an Electoral College pickle for quite some time. The Left likes to think they're on the verge of a permanent majority, though these two demographers noted a scenario where the GOP's hold on the white working class could give Republicans the electoral advantage, despite favorable demographic shifts that yielded more minority voters. That's because a geographic wall-the cities, hems in Democrats. That's fine if you have more voters in your ranks, if they live in areas that have been Democratic for eons and not competitive in national elections, it doesn't make a difference. There are definitely some in the GOP elite that know this. Democrats should also know that a lack of presence in the rural areas does spell political death if they don't reclaim some territory in the near future. The strategies of accomplishing that, like not stripping support from pro-life Democrats, might cause heartburn among the progressive wing of the party. Not supporting single-payer could also devolve into Democratic blood sports. Concerning these high concentrations of minority voters, given that the suburbs are where most voters live and are evenly split, that still wouldn't be an issue under the NPV.

My point is not that complicated, guys: Democrats' historic geographic concentration is negatively impacting their ability to win power.

If more than 50% of your '16 voters lived in just 9 states & 94 of America's 3,141 counties...you're probably not a healthy national party.

Besides curbing bad policy, the Florida issue cannot be ignored. Florida will be blue in our lifetime. That's 29 electoral votes added to the Democrats' guaranteed 242, which is the ballgame. I'm not a person who thinks the constitution is fungible, but this is a state-based initiative that could work. I do want to learn more before taking a side. I'm sure all of you have opinions on this matter and I hope you debate them in the comments section below. For now, just call me a Devil's advocate on the matter. Not for or against, but wanting a debate on it. Donald Trump and the GOP might have a solid lead with white working class voters that will bolster their standing in elections, but that will go away. Trump can't be president forever, and Democrats are learning the hard way that you can't build your entire movement and party apparatus around one term-limited individual. I say let's have a debate on the National Popular Vote Interstate Compact. That alone cannot hurt the country.

Unfortunately, there are only a limited number of guest rooms available at the Salt Fork State Park Lodge. While the Ohio Chamber has reserved every one of them for our Policy Conference, there simply aren't enough to permit every guest to reserve his or her own room. As a result, you will likely have to share a room with another conference attendee. We cannot accommodate requests for individual rooms. If you do not request a roommate, we will assign you one. Entering a roommate's name on your registration form DOES NOT register that roommate for the conference. They must fill out their own form or you must "add them as a guest" on your form.

Right-to-Work Is Right for America

This week is National Employee Freedom Week (NEFW), an annual effort started by the Nevada Policy Research Institute and the Association of American Educators to highlight the benefits of giving employees the freedom to opt out of union membership. The Heartland Institute is one of many participating organizations in NEFW.

Currently, there are 28 states with right-to-work (RTW) legislation, which gives workers the right to refrain from joining a union, including not having to pay union dues or fees, without being penalized.

A newly released NEFW study compares the attitudes, performances, and management of union employees in RTW states compared to those in non-RTW states. When asked about contract negotiations, working conditions, job security, fringe benefits, and number of hours worked, union members in both RTW states and non-RTW states rated these factors highly, with no significant differences between their ratings.

Opponents of RTW say union members in non-RTW states are significantly disadvantaged, but the study found members in both RTW and non-RTW states “expressed broad support [above 70 percent] for the opportunity to regularly vote on whether to keep representation from their current union (a process often called ‘recertification.’)”

RTW policies also have been proven to have a positive economic impact on state economies. A survey of CNBC's Global CFO Council members shows two-thirds believe RTW laws are "important" or "very important" when it comes to business location or expansion. States with these policies have attracted more businesses, experienced greater job growth, and increased union membership compared to states without RTW laws, such as Illinois.

As Senior Policy Analyst Matthew Glans describes in a recent Research & Commentary on the subject, "States enacting RTW policies have experienced positive economic progress across the board. Regionally, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Michigan, Missouri, and Wisconsin have passed RTW and experienced far greater job growth than Illinois has over the same period."

Ball State University professor Michael Hicks concluded in his 2016 study on the effect right-to-work laws have on worker productivity: "We estimate a Cobb-Douglas production function for manufacturing industries at the state level and find that total factor productivity in non-RTW states was about 57 percent of the level in RTW states. ... Furthermore, our firm-level analysis from the 2007 Survey of Business Owners found that RTW states achieved higher productivity (sales per employee) than firms in non-RTW states."

Additionally, a 2014 Gallup poll found a majority of Americans, Democrats and Republicans alike, approve of RTW laws. Seventy-one percent of respondents said they would vote for such laws and 82 percent said they believe "no American should be required to join any private organization, like a labor union, against his will."

Union membership rates are at all-time lows, and RTW law adoptions are at all-time highs. State legislators should consider carefully this trend toward embracing employee freedom and implement right-to-work legislation in their own state.

Fossil-Fuel Divestment Could Cost Public Pensions Big Bucks, Study Finds

In this article for Environment & Climate News, Managing Editor H. Sterling Burnett writes about a new study compiled by Compass Lexicon that shows fossil-fuel divestment is costly to investors. According to the report, university endowments and public employee pension funds that bow to environmentalists' demands that they divest their holdings from companies involved with the fossil-fuel industry could suffer significant losses, or at a minimum, have their endowments, portfolios, and retirement funds grow by substantially less than they otherwise would. The report notes environmental groups have already pressured more than 1,000 universities and state and city retirement funds to divest their holdings of stocks and bonds in companies that finance, produce, transport, or burn fossil fuels to produce electricity, which they blame for numerous alleged environmental problems and climate change. Our nation is struggling with an often-vicious political climate, but it won't be fixed by a once-in-a-generation eclipse! It can only be fixed by hard work.

In two weeks Congress will be back in session, and we'll be fighting to make sure they put aside partisan games and do their job. Will you join us?

When they return, Congress will need to address pressing issues like tax reform, the debt ceiling, healthcare, foreign sanctions, and immigration.

The American people don't have time for partisan gridlock. That's why we're demanding our leaders get right to work on real bipartisan solutions. Sign on if you agree.

Good morning,

230 years ago, as Benjamin Franklin was emerging from the Constitutional Convention, a woman called out to him asking, "What form of government have you given us, Dr. Franklin?" And he responded,

"A republic, Madame, if you can keep it."

Franklin knew that to sustain the American experiment in self-government, Americans needed to understand and appreciate the founding principles and pass them on to future generations.

Yet today so many high school and college graduates don't know the real story of America. Some even despise America.

How did this happen? Over the years, schools of education have focused on how to teach rather than what to teach. Teachers lack the knowledge and appreciation of American history they need to teach what it means to be an American.

But you and I can make a difference.

Here at the Ashbrook Center we are educating teachers and encouraging them to replace textbooks in their classrooms with primary documents — documents like the Constitution and the Federalist Papers.

We are transforming the way American history and civics are taught in classrooms across the country.

And with your generous support, Ashbrook will reach an entire generation of young people and give them the kind of education the Founders thought essential to protect American freedom.

Can I count on your help to live up to Dr. Franklin's challenge? Can I count on you to help preserve American freedom for our children and grandchildren?

I hope you will join me.

Best regards,

Roger L. Beckett
Executive Director

Democracy in Retreat

Karla Jones & Cy Tongate | International Relations

Democratic principles advanced so steadily that they seemed destined to become universal, however, this progress has been replaced by a rise in authoritarian rule. From free expression to pluralism, from individual rights to rule of law, liberal democracy is retreating worldwide. Since 2000, no fewer than 25 democracies have failed around the world and more show alarming signs of weakening. Because autocrats thrive in darkness, we will shine a spotlight on authoritarian regimes in the ascent as a reminder of the ease with which democracy, including our own, can erode. This month we will look at events in Venezuela and the Philippines. We should heed the words of America's Founders who understood how fragile the republic they created was. "A Constitution of Government once changed from Freedom, can never be restored. Liberty, once lost, is lost forever." 2 – John Adams

Phoenix Convention Was an Enormous Success –

The September 12 – 15 Phoenix Convention was called by the Arizona State Legislature (HCR2022) for the express purpose of planning for a BBA-focused Article V convention of states and to draft suggested rules for such a convention.

This historic convention was the first convention of states called by a state legislature to which all states were invited since 1861. The 1861 Peace Conference, called by the state of Virginia and chaired by former President John Tyler, was an attempt to head off the civil war. The Phoenix Convention was called as a step toward an Article V convention that will propose a Constitutional amendment aimed at restoring federal fiscal restraint. It took place just days after America's national debt surpassed $20 trillion.

= A All states were invited to send delegates. Nineteen states sent a total of 72 formal delegates to Phoenix. Another four states had official observers present. Some 25 additional observers were also present.

On the first day of the convention the delegates unanimously elected Arizona State Rep. Kelly Townsend as Convention President. Utah State Rep. Ken Ivory was elected Vice President, and Georgia attorney David Guldenschuh was elected Convention Secretary. The Arizona legislature made some 50 of its staff members available to assist with the convention.

A brief video about the history of conventions of states was shown. It can be viewed

HERE.

Welcoming presentations were offered by Arizona Speaker of the House J. D. Menard and by Senator Steve Montenegro representing the Arizona Senate. Opening remarks were presented by former Oklahoma State Rep. Gary Banz (who was the chief sponsor of that state's successful resolution calling for a BBA-focused Article V convention). His speech was followed by a standing ovation. The speech can be watched HERE (beginning at 22:05... through 46:36).

Arizona State Senator Nancy Barto presented a report from the Arizona legislators who had been appointed to plan the Phoenix Convention. It included recommendations on the rules under which the Phoenix Convention would operate, recommendations of temporary chairs for the three recommended committees (Rules, Planning, Credentials), and recommendations for Clerk, Sergeant of Arms and Parliamentarian for the Phoenix Convention. The report and recommendations were unanimously approved and accepted by the delegates.

Prior to the Phoenix Convention legislators from several states had worked together to draft a basic set of suggested rules for a future BBA-focused Article V convention. Their work became known as Resolution 1 for the Phoenix Convention.

Three Committees Formed:

The convention broke into the three committees with each represented state having at least one delegate serving on the two main committees. The committees each elected a chairman.

Gary Banz chaired the Rules Committee. Tennessee immediately moved to adopt Resolution 1 (the initial draft of the proposed rules for an Article V Convention). The motion was unanimously adopted.

The Rules Committee met all day Wednesday, Thursday and part of Friday as it entertained a large variety of proposed amendments to Resolution 1. There was often vigorous, but respectful, debate as each state's spokesperson provided rationale for their suggested amendments. By Friday afternoon delegates comprising the Rules Committee voted unanimously to approve the modified Resolution 1 (rules package).

At the final session of the convention the amended Resolution 1 was unanimously approved by the convention as a whole. That rules package can be reviewed HERE.

Arizona State Rep. Bob Thorpe served as chair of the Planning Committee. That committee divided its work into two sub-committees (one to suggest how states should select delegates to a future Article V convention, and one to deal with time, place and logistics of holding a convention).

Reports from the two sub-committees were presented to the convention as a whole. Again, amendments were offered from the floor, entertained, and changes were accommodated before they were unanimously approved by the convention as a whole. Those reports can be read HERE.

The Credentials Committee was chaired by Michigan delegate Tom Llewellyn who kept track of delegate attendance at each session. Attendance records can be viewed HERE.

On the opening night of the Phoenix Convention the BBA Task Force hosted a dinner for convention delegates. Former Virginia Attorney General Ken Cuccinelli was the keynote speaker.

The convention was closed with a presentation by Georgia delegate David Guldenschuh. He pointed out that the convention's closing day (9/15) was the 230th birthday of the writing and unanimous adoption of Article V of the new US Constitution, just 2 days before the new Constitution was completed and sent to the states for ratification. His speech can be viewed HERE.

General Observations:

Not one time did the Phoenix Convention “runaway” or get off the topics assigned in the original call by the Arizona legislature. The entire convention was orderly. It provided an excellent model for a future Article V convention.

The delegates demonstrated orderly decorum and united behind the principles of one vote per state, and the limiting of discussions to one subject at a future BBA-focused Article V convention.

The Phoenix Convention Drew Considerable Media Coverage –

Following is a sample of the press coverage given to the Phoenix Convention (click on underlined copy to read the stories):

Both the US News and World Report and the Idaho Statesman carried an Associated Press story about the convention headlined GOP lawmakers push balanced budget mandate in Constitution.

The Conservative Review carried a story under the headline Article V convention planning underway in Arizona.

The Arizona Republic carried a story announcing 22 states participate in ‘historic’ gathering.

Townhall.com published a review of conventions of states written by Prof. Rob Natelson under the headline Convention of States: How the States Meet to Bypass Congress.

Idaho television station KTVB did a special story on the 10 delegates its legislature sent to the Phoenix Convention and posted the story on its web site headlined Idaho lawmakers take part in historic gathering.

Surprisingly, even SFGate.com (San Francisco) carried a story headlined Idaho sends 10 delegates to balanced budget convention.

Even the Washington (Indiana) Times-Herald carried a piece on the convention.

After the convention concluded ABC News carried a report headlined GOP lawmakers finish plan for balanced budget convention.

The Hill also carried a follow-up story headlined GOP state lawmakers meet to plan possible constitutional convention.

AZCentral (a part of the USA Today network) published a post-convention report headlined Phoenix constitutional convention gives 'rebirth to a new nation,' planners say.

The American Legislative Exchange Council published a report on the convention headlined History Was Made in Phoenix This Month.

The Rome (Georgia) News-Tribune carried a post-convention report by Georgia Senator Chuck Hufstetler headlined Using a 'forgotten power': Convention of states planning ahead to force congress to balance the budget.

The Conservative Daily Post reported 22 States Make BOLD Pact As State Leaders Gather In Arizona For A Bold Constitutional Change.

The Tulsa (Oklahoma) World reported State lawmakers take part in planning for possible constitutional convention.

Phoenix Correspondence Commission Created –

One of the big developments at the Phoenix Convention was creation of the Phoenix Correspondence Commission (PCC). Among other decisions, delegates unanimously agreed to establish the PCC to facilitate communication between the states, Congress, and the public on Article V and a proposed balanced budget amendment.

PCC is fashioned after the “committees of correspondence” that were common during the colonial era. Initially the new Commission will consist of one member of each state delegation that attended the Phoenix Convention. Arizona State Rep. Anthony Kern will serve as the PCC temporary chairman.

The new PCC is charged with tracking Article V resolutions adopted by the states calling for a BBA Article V convention, encouraging at least seven more states to adopt such resolutions, and encouraging all state legislatures to adopt legislation appointing and instructing delegates to the anticipated first Article V convention.

The consensus of the Phoenix Convention was that members of the new PCC are now the leaders of the Article V movement. They appeared to welcome the responsibility.

The Economist* Publishes Major Piece on Article V –

Reporters from the London-based The Economist magazine were in Phoenix during the recent Phoenix Convention. Surprisingly this primarily-financial foreign publication has taken more serious interest in Article V than most major US media.

On September 30 Economist.com published an extensive piece on the entire Article V movement in the US. While the second paragraph was a bit jumbled (initially implying that founding Father George Mason did not like the two-option approach to Constitutional amendment... the approach he actually proposed and which was unanimously adopted), the detailed article is a mostly accurate overview of Article V.

Toward the end of the article it unfortunately repeats the misinformation about the 1787 Philadelphia convention... suggesting that the Constitutional framers were working under the authority of the original Articles of Confederation, and (without authority) changed the requirements for ratification. Using that example the story says, "Delegates could simply declare a new, lower threshold for ratification."

As most serious Constitutional scholars know, the framers were not working under the Articles of Confederation, but were complying with the direction of the state legislatures which called the Philadelphia convention... producing a new governing document for a totally new national government.

Within the context of this misrepresentation of the origins of America's 1787 Constitution, the Economist quoted Larry Greenley of the John Birch Society, saying of an Article V convention, "This is a convention that creates constitutions. It's a level above state legislatures, and can't be limited. We really believe that any Article V convention would have the ability to change the ratification process."

Of course there is no provision in Article V for re-writing or “creating” a new Constitution... only to propose amendments. Period. Read the Economist article HERE.

A Debt Ceiling With No Limit? –

Friday September 8, 2017 America's federal debt formally surpassed $20 trillion. On that one day alone the debt grew by $317,645,000,000, following a spending and debt-limit deal agreed to by President Trump and large “Yes” votes by both Houses of Congress... to fund the government through December 8. The above figures are from the Treasury Department's "Debt to the Penny" page.

The “deal” involved disaster recovery aid for the victims of recent hurricanes... but no longer pretends to have a debt ceiling cap.

An article on Hotair.com by Ed Morrissey noted that “President Trump on Thursday signaled openness to a proposal to effectively eliminate the federal limit on government borrowing....” Morrissey reported that “Trump and Senate Minority Leader Charles E. Schumer (D-N.Y.) reached what one senior White House official called a ‘gentlemen’s agreement’ to develop a plan that would no longer require Congress to routinely raise the limit on government borrowing.”

Morrissey offered the opinion that “The best way to deal with the debt ceiling is with a balanced-budget amendment. If Congress won’t produce one — and they won’t — then the states need to accelerate the Article V convention to impose it on them.” Read his article HERE.

Just a few days before “the deal” was struck, FreedomWorks (a Tea Party-affiliated activist group) made it clear that Congress and the White House that the people it represents will not support a “clean” debt limit increase — that is, one without any spending cuts or policy riders or some type of regulatory reform attached to any bill that raises the debt ceiling. No spending cuts, riders or reforms were attached to the adopted bill... and it appears to have no spending ceiling. Read the Politico report on FreedomWorks’ positions HERE.

“Of all the absurd Washington pantomimes none has been as reliably entertaining and maddening as the annual debates to raise the debt ceiling,” said Peter D. Schiff of Euro Pacific Capitol in a piece published by FX.com after the debt ceiling “deal” was announced.

Schiff is best known for his predictions of the 2008 financial crisis. FX.com is described as a leading source for reliable (financial) news and real time foreign exchange analysis.

Schiff’s September 8 article says, “(T)his week the news dropped that President Trump had made a ‘gentleman’s agreement’²⁰ with Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer to permanently scrap the ‘debt ceiling’ so that government borrowing can occur perpetually without the need to air the nation’s fiscal dirty laundry. Given how much the national debt has exploded in recent decades, and how reluctant Congress has been to address the problem, it should be no surprise that the proposal has finally been made.”

Talking about the often-rising debt ceiling, Schiff says, “If we eliminate the only tool, the problem will never be fixed. If the debt ceiling were to be cut out like an unneeded appendix, we should expect that America’s foray into debt creation, which has already been fantastical, to journey even farther into the looking glass.”

He suggests that “This could be the worst possible choice for the U.S. economy, and investors should be prepared. It could produce a dollar and sovereign debt crisis that will dwarf the financial crisis of 2008 with respect to its impact on the American economy. It could make hurricane Irma look like a sun shower.” Read Schiff’s article HERE.

Hillary Clinton Apparently Doesn't Understand Article V –

In a recent podcast interview with Vox.com, Hillary Clinton talked about the Convention of States Project. She reportedly said, "They want radical, pull-'em-up-by-the-roots change, they want to have a constitutional convention to rewrite our Constitution to make it friendlier to business, to inject religious and ideological elements. So talk about radical change—they are pursuing it, they are funding it, and they are electing people who are either true believers or willing vehicles for it."

Mark Meckler, head of the COS Project wrote an op-ed for The Hill, tearing apart Clinton's criticisms piece-by-piece. Meckler's op-ed can be read HERE.

Another web blog, Legallnsurrection.com also posted a piece on Clinton's failure to understand Article V. On September 27 it published a piece entitled Hillary Doesn't Understand What a Convention of States Actually Is. Read it HERE.

Congressional Dysfunction Spurs Interest in Term Limits –

Even with one party controlling both Houses of Congress, it does not seem capable of accomplishing much. That dysfunction is increasing the interest in using Article V to enshrine Congressional term limits in the Constitution.

During the past month a combined meeting of two Georgia Tea Party groups heard a presentation from James Alvarado, state director for US Term Limits. "We did a poll last year, and 82 percent of [Georgians] —that's Republicans, Democrats and Independents — all agree on one thing: term limits in Congress," he said.

Alvarado encouraged attendees to support Georgia State Resolution 195 to call for an Article V convention for term limits. The resolution was introduced in February but has not been approved by the state legislature.

During September Ken Clark, Regional Director for the Convention of States Project was interviewed on the Daily Ledger program of AcuNewsDaily where the host talked about federalism and Article V with a focus on federal term limits. The very good interview can be viewed HERE.

Meanwhile an Idaho resident wrote a letter to the Coeur d'Alene/Post Falls Press that was published under the heading Term Them Out. The writer said "I would like to see an article 5 convention of states to force a constitutional amendment imposing term limits on ALL federal House and Senate members IF it could be limited to that issue ONLY." Read the letter HERE.

This past month the ebook version of Term Limits by Vince Flynn was released. It claims to be a New York Times best seller book. Learn about it HERE.

Who Said It?

*"We must not let the growing momentum to propose crucial amendments to the Constitution be obstructed by territorial differences or the pretense that Article V is a binary choice.
Rather, let's recognize the synergies between the various efforts lest they all be ended before they have really begun."*
